From tasty noodles to sweet, sticky rice to savory soups, Asian food is pretty fantastic. Delicious Asian restaurants abound in Eugene, but with the recent influx of Asian cuisine — a sushi and Korean restaurant is replacing Diablo's, Chinese restaurants filling the spots beneath UO student housing complexes, Eugene's first Cambodian cafe opening on Chambers — a definitive theme emerged. And so, EW presents to you an Asian-themed issue of Chow. In these pages, we review $2 sushi, explore local Asian markets, guzzle kombucha (which is thought to have originated in China) and track down the best Asian recipes from local restaurants. It's time to dig in.

THE KORE TAPHOUSE WILL SERVE KOMBUCHA, KEFIR AND OTHER FERMENTED DELIGHTS By Amy Schneider

THE TAPS AT KORE KOMBUCHA

When Curtis Shimmen (pictured above) founded Kore Kombucha three years ago, he was already dreaming about opening a kombucha taphouse.

"Taphouses are a great way to introduce people to a wide variety of kombucha," Shimmen says, pointing out that most stores carry only a few flavors of the bubbly, fermented drink, leaving out some more enigmatic concoctions, such as coffee kombucha with raspberry or vanilla chai kombucha.

The Kore Taphouse, which will open sometime in late April at 543 Blair Blvd., offers 29 kombuchas on tap, including Humm Kombucha from Bend and Brew Dr. from Portland. The taphouse will also feature other drinkable fermented beverages — namely kefir (pronounced kee-fur), a fermented milk drink full of probiotics and calcium. Think of a fizzy milkshake with a hit of tanginess.

Once the taphouse is up and running, Shimmen says, he plans to offer a menu revolving around fermented and cultured foods, ranging from drinkable dairy kefir cheeses to fermented veggie dishes: sauerkraut and kimchi, for starters. On Sundays, Shimmen says, he plans to offer breakfast, with fermented beer batter pancakes. Most days the taphouse will be open for lunch and dinner.

Another probiotic beverage Shimmen plans to serve is called jun, a lesser known cousin to kombucha.

"It's similar to kombucha in that it's brewed with a SCOBY [a symbiotic colony of bacteria and yeast], but jun feeds on honey and green tea as opposed to kombucha, which feeds primarily on black tea and cane sugar," Shimmen explains.

To boost your herbal intake, the taphouse also features housemade herbal tinctures and tonics, convenient add-ins to the fermented drinks. Longevity Tonic with ginseng and goji berry contains anti-aging herbs, while Passion Potion offers a dose of jasmine flower, hawthorn berry and ginkgo, a traditional Chinese aphrodisiac.

With its bright purple and metallic walls and center-of-it-all spot in the Whiteaker, Kore Taphouse will make a delightful venue, and Shimmen says he plans to host three music or comedy shows a week.

A spacious outdoor seating area in the back, shared with sushi restaurant Mame, will be next on Shimmen's list of updates to the building, which once served as an automotive shop. He's envisioning a wood deck with plenty of room for outdoor dining and decorations.

"Since this is kind of a unique space, I'm striving for some uniqueness to get people in," Shimmen says. "I feel extremely fortunate to have the opportunity to work in this space and introduce some healthy alternatives to the neighborhood, and I look forward to working with all of the other local proprietors." ■

Kore Taphouse is located at 543 Blair Blvd. and hours are yet to be determined. Follow updates on its Facebook page.

Small Cart, Big Taste

TWO FRIENDS AND A VIETNAMESE
FOOD CART By Vanessa Salvia

TONY NGO SERVES A HELPING OF VIETNAMESE FOOD

“The term ‘fusion food’ gets used so much nowadays,” says Tony Ngo, co-owner of Da Nang Vietnamese Eatery, which won third place for food carts in EW’s Best of Eugene. “Vietnamese food is one of those organic fusion foods.”

Tony Ngo and co-owner James Ngo (no relation) are long-time friends with families here in Eugene. They opened the Da Nang food cart last May and named it after the city where both of their families are from. Earlier this year both men traveled to Vietnam for six weeks to see family and research food.

“What makes Vietnamese food so unique is it’s influenced by so many different cultures,” Tony Ngo says. In particular, France, along with China and Japan, left a mark on the country. “Vietnamese food is really balanced. You get every flavor spectrum — sweet, salty, sour, spicy and bitter. And the other key is it’s really fresh. It’s vibrant and crispy.”

While bread is not common in most Asian countries, a popular Vietnamese breakfast is coffee with eggs and toasted baguette, harkening to the French influence.

Tony Ngo and James Ngo met through family. About three years ago, the friends began talking about opening a food cart. Both of their families work in the nail salon business, and both Ngos were attending college at the time with no real desire to continue working at salons.

Once they realized they shared a vision of serving food, the cart became a reality a short time later.

“In Vietnamese culture everybody is community, everybody knows each other and food is a very big thing,” James Ngo says. “With families it’s always about dinner at the table. It doesn’t matter how old you are: When it’s dinnertime, you’re at the table. That’s how people get together.”

Tony Ngo says he grew up shadowing his mother in the kitchen, and food service made sense as a way to put his business minor degree into use.

The pair took advantage of the winter lull in the food cart season to fly out on New Year’s Eve to their families’ hometown of Da Nang, a large port city in the country’s center. It was the first time either of them had been there without their families and the first time since they were young teenagers.

“We definitely did a lot of eating!” Tony Ngo says. “My cousin owns a bakery and sells bánh mì sandwiches [made with a baguette]. My auntie owns a bánh mì cart that you would see on the stoop. I got to hang out with her for a couple of days and watch how she does it.”

Another aunt sells a noodle soup called mi quang, also from a cart. It’s quite common for restaurants or individuals to prepare and serve only one signature item.

This notion of specialization helped shape their menu. They offer a minimal selection of four different entrees — rice bowl, noodle bowl, salad or sandwich — and three proteins — tofu, steak or chicken. “When we were starting up we thought if we did less things, but we did them really well, it would be better than trying to offer a wider array of things that weren’t as good,” Tony Ngo says.

James Ngo says the entrees are similar because they can all be topped with a fresh combination of pickled veggies, cucumber, mint, lettuce, sprouts and cilantro and other garnishes and a house blend fish sauce, but the options are versatile. “We definitely have people who get hooked on one combination and stick to that, and we have people who try every combination,” he says.

It’s the fish sauce that trips most people up. “The ‘holy trinity’ of Vietnamese cuisine is garlic, lemongrass, Thai chilies and fish sauce,” Tony Ngo says. “That’s the thing that scares people. But fish sauce is very sweet and savory and helps tie everything together. It’s almost like a vinaigrette, and just balances it all out.”

They source ingredients locally as much as possible, except for the bread, which they get from a Vietnamese bakery in Portland. They haven’t yet found a local baker willing to make the Vietnamese baguette to their strict specifications, so for now it’s twice-weekly deliveries.

They’re reluctant to serve sandwiches once the bread is past its prime, but judging from the positive Yelp reviews, even the occasional dry bun doesn’t dampen their patrons’ enthusiasm for this cart’s small menu with big taste.

The cart is closed on Tuesdays and Thursdays and rotates between three other locations in the Whiteaker neighborhood. Tony and James suggest following the cart on Instagram or Facebook, or downloading the Eugene Street Food app to find them wherever they happen to be. ■

The ancient Chinese invention of the noodle still enjoys popularity in Asian cuisine to this day. The types of noodles available differ almost as vastly as the common dishes in which they appear. Here is a short guide to a select few of the most common noodle soups, as well as the various noodles found immersed in their broth.

Udon Noodle: The thickest of the common wheat noodle is chewy yet mild in flavor.

Rice Noodle: In most popular instances, these noodles are narrow and flat. They tend to cook up softer and take on the flavor of their soup more readily.

YOUR GUIDE TO LANE COUNTY'S ASIAN GROCERY STORES By Amy Schneider

You don't have to live in a big city to enjoy the benefits of an Asian market: Eugene and Springfield have a smattering of markets full of the best and most unusual ingredients Asian cuisine has to offer. Some have been here since the '90s and some are only a few years old, but if you have a recipe (Asian or not) that you're dying to try out, make sure to stop by these locally owned grocery stores first.

Sunrise Asian Food Market

70 W. 29th Ave.; 343-3295

Nestled into the busy marketplace at South Willamette and 29th Avenue, Sunrise Asian Food Market (pictured above) is South Eugene's provider of Asian wares. Soybean paste, sushi supplies, frozen calamari, gigantic jars of kimchi — it's all there.

Exploring the aisles is like stepping out of Eugene. Most produce is marked with elegant Asian characters; some offer English interpretations and some compel you to make your best guess. Items are gloriously colorful, with every pastel shade imaginable — mochi ice cream and Pocky sticks entice with their bright packaging.

Sunrise features a deli that sells fresh takeout food, including yakisoba noodles and sushi. Also, make sure to check out Sunrise's tea selection. It's a literal wall of tea, sure to send tea lovers careening into fits of joy.

Yi Shen Vietnamese Market

1915 W. 11th Ave.; 683-9386

Yi Shen Vietnamese Market opened in 1997, after owner Phung Tu moved to Eugene from Vietnam. The West 11th market is both a grocery store and restaurant, loved for its Vietnamese noodle salad, barbecue pork and pho. Tu says she sees a wide variety of customers, but she says her student customers usually come in for snacks or something quick — think instant noodles. "You should see them during finals week," she says. Others come in search of specific ingredients for recipes.

The market is small, with gigantic bags of jasmine rice piled along the main aisle. Cute and cozy, with a small seating area on the restaurant side of the market, Yi Shen is a great place to try delicious Vietnamese food and then pick up the ingredients and supplies — cutlery, woks and dishes — you need to make your own version at home.

Eugene Asian Market

503 E. 11th Ave.; 344-2888

Tucked away near the UO campus on East 11th, the storefront of Eugene Asian Market is a little imposing, with a passageway of stairs and railings to walk through, but once you're in, you'll find a nice-sized market stocked with Asian staples. There's limited fresh produce, but a wide selection of bottled drinks — green teas, aloe juices and fruit concoctions. Eugene Asian Market also features an amazing variety of sake.

King's Asian Market

2100 W. 11th Ave.; 343-7333

With its orderly aisles, high ceilings and well-stocked shelves, King's Asian Market has all the markings of a generic grocery store — until you notice the massive statues of Buddha and beautiful wall hangings portraying Chinese waterfalls and other peaceful settings.

Wendy Yeung, whose family owns the market, says that King's opened in 2013. She sees mostly American clientele, she says, and people typically come to the store looking for ingredients to make their own sushi or Thai cuisine. Most merchandise comes from L.A., Seattle and San Francisco, she says.

Large and comprehensive, the market stocks everything from coconut milk blended drinks to organic mung beans. Oddities (to the Americanized eye) include a bottled drink with ginseng root suspended in liquid and an assortment of colorful kimonos and sandals tucked away in a corner of the store.

Uptown Asian Grocery

3834 Main St., Spfd.; 747-4177

This cute market in Springfield is the only grocery store in Lane County that specializes in Filipino groceries, although it offers a bit of Thai and Japanese fare, as well. As the only Asian market in Springfield, Uptown Asian Grocery is a useful resource for Filipinos living in Lane County, says storeowner Jen Mattes.

She and her husband, originally from the Philippines, bought the store two years ago. Uptown sells fresh fruit and vegetables, including eggplant and coconut, and has a massive selection of sauces and seasonings, from soy sauce to sweet chili sauce. Mattes says some of her most popular items are bright red Filipino hot dogs and noodles.

WooHoo!
It's been three

Cambodian Cuisine

NEW CAFE INTRODUCES THE FOOD OF SOUTHEAST ASIA By Daemion Lee

If you're not sure what Cambodian food is like, Horn Nov, the owner of Angkor Cambodian Cafe, offers some tantalizing clues.

"Next door to Thailand, next door to Vietnam," he says about Cambodia's closest neighbors. "A lot of fresh ingredients, lemon grass, turmeric, ginger."

The curry, for example, is served with noodles, Cambodian-style. Nov tries to describe it and then decides to bring out a bowl of the colorful dish instead.

A quick spoonful and it is immediately clear that noodle curry gives a unique twist to the staple ingredients in Southeast Asian food: The taste is subtle and savory, flavorful but not overpowering. It really is like a cross between Thai and Vietnamese food.

"The curry is slower cooked," Nov says. "It's more stew-like, not as strong as Indian curry."

Angkor is the only Cambodian restaurant in Eugene — in the 20 years he's lived in the area, Nov says he has never seen another restaurant serving the cuisine. It's been open since Jan. 14, and Nov says he offers a unique alternative to the other Southeast Asian restaurants in town.

The cafe serves both noodle and rice dishes, including its signature Phnom Penh noodle — named after the Cambodian capital city — along with lemongrass chicken with rice and curry noodle with chicken. Loat cha — made with tapered noodles only found in Cambodian food — is on the menu, along with house special fried rice. The cooks make vegetarian options with a vegetable-based broth, and the fish noodle soup, Nov says, is made in the traditional fashion unique to Cambodia.

It is a family business, Nov explains, and they serve the dishes he likes to eat at home. "The recipes are from my wife's family and my mom as well," he says. "I'm always around food."

His daughter, Holly Nov, helps at the restaurant, and her duties include "a little bit of everything," she says.

Originally, Nov and his wife planned on starting the Cambodian restaurant when they retired. But when an opportunity came up, they decided to go for it. "We opened sooner," he says. "It's the right time to do it."

The restaurant is named after Angkor Wat, the large, ancient stone temple in Cambodia, which is a major tourist attraction and is listed as a World Heritage Site by the United Nations. "A lot of tourists have been to Cambodia to visit Angkor," Nov says. But he says he hopes people can learn to appreciate the country's food as well. "It's clean, healthy food," he explains. "A lot of vegetables."

Of course, if you really want to know what Cambodian food is like, Nov admits there is really only one thing to do. "You just have to come in and try," he says. "That's the only way to find out." ■

Angkor Cafe is located on 1810 Chambers St., right behind Subway, open 11 am to 9 pm Monday through Saturday. More information can be found on its Facebook page.

Two Dolla Holla

THE ART OF CHEAP SUSHI By Isabel Zacharias

Though perhaps not the salmon nigiri you'll rave to your friends about or the most amazing Cali roll you've ever had, 541 Sushi Bar's conveyor belt-style fare really isn't half bad — especially at a consistent $2 a plate. And the restaurant, which opened Dec. 10, doesn't aim to be fine dining, anyway. Owner Wookyn Lee would be the first to tell you this.

Lee had been toying with opening a sushi place for about two years when, this summer, he noticed the open space at Broadway and Pearl where Lebanese restaurant Dalia had just vacated. "I saw the sign and thought, 'It can't happen,'" Lee tells EW. "But it happened."

Two weeks later, the lease was signed; Lee's restaurant vision began to materialize, but from the get-go, his values were different from those of other, more traditional local sushi joints.

"The sushi is just food for me," Lee says. "Sushi is just sushi. If they're looking for some kind of art, then go to some fine dining and pay for it. If they need some food ... then come here to eat, to sit. Different ideas."

Though Lee says he's been making sushi since he was young and it feels "familiar" to him, he expresses some disdain for the idea of sushi as an artistically pretentious or competitive craft. Restaurants more formal than 541 Sushi Bar, he says, "approach it from, 'I've been working in sushi for a long time. I am the sushi master.' We don't do it that way, and it doesn't matter. We're selling the same fish and same food."

In fact, Lee says that most sushi places in town buy from the same supplier, and that more expensive sushi is simply sold at a higher mark-up price.

"They're selling service, not food," Lee explains. "They make some good decorations, which is not about eating."

It's more than being all about eating, though. 541 Sushi Bar's name itself points to its dual function as a drinking establishment, and Lee says the restaurant's liquor license has played a big role in its identity.

"In this area, they drink a lot," Lee says of the usual patrons. "They drink a lot of sake; they drink a lot of beer." And with food at such a bargain price, "they have some room to drink."

To seal the deal, 541 Sushi Bar eliminates the most common fear associated with conveyor belt sushi: "People say, 'Oh, if it's out on the belt, it's been sitting there all day,'" Lee says. "But no."

Not only are there health codes in place to prevent this from happening, but 541 Sushi Bar's system is sophisticated: Each dish is given a bar code, and a machine "kicks out" a dish from the rotation after two hours.

For the first time, maybe ever, Eugene's sushi scene sees a harmonious midpoint between economy and quality — one that'll be hard to compete with. Never had sushi before? Don't hesitate. "Try it," Lee says. "Two bucks." ■

541 Sushi is at 898 Pearl St. and is open 11 am to 9 pm daily.

Fish Flavored Chicken

FROM KUNG FU BISTRO

Two years ago, Kung Fu Bistro owners Candy Duan and Tony Luo moved from Los Angeles, where they worked in restaurants for eight years, to Eugene to open a Szechuan restaurant. Duan and Luo are from Chengdu, the capital of Szechuan province. "Eugene needed more authentic Chinese restaurants," Duan says. "Our food is very traditional."

"No sweet and sour chicken," laughs server Ivan Xiao. The ubiquitous condiment, Chinese hot mustard, is not used in Szechuan, so Kung Fu Bistro doesn't have any, which flummoxes some American diners. Duan says some patrons ask for lemon in their water and they don't have those either, because lemons aren't used in Szechuan cuisine.

What is liberally used is Szechuan pepper, an intensely fragrant, citrusy spice that produces a tongue-numbing sensation. Duan says Szechuan pepper, which is not a real pepper but the berry from a Chinese ash tree, is used to stimulate the taste buds and warm the body. "It's good, especially in Eugene," she says. "Lots of rain. The weather is like Chengdu, always cloudy."

This recipe is called "fish flavored" due to the literal translation of the name of the sauce, yuxiang, not because it contains seafood. "It was originally a seasoning blend or sauce that was used for fish," Xiao says. "Now it is used for other things." When Duan provided this recipe, she painstakingly converted her recipe in grams to ounces. Her measurements are provided along with the conversion. — Vanessa Salvia

Tidal Wave Curry

FROM IZAKAYA MEIJI

For the past 18 months, Izakaya Meiji chef Joel Poston has been translating curry recipes cooked by the Japanese Navy. He discovered a trove of recipes posted to the website of the Japanese military defense. For April, it's a curry from a ship called the Tidal Wave. "It's traditional now to serve curry on every Japanese ship and every Japanese military base on Fridays," Poston says.

"It's kind of a treat. On the ships it's always served with a glass of milk and an iceberg salad."

It takes him a while to translate and re-create the dishes but the results are a flavorful introduction to Japanese cuisine by way of the British, who appropriated curry from India and introduced it to Japan during the Meiji era (1868-1912), when the country was opening its borders.

Each ship has its own signature curry — the "Tidal Wave" is an escort ship — and each month Poston cooks a recipe from a new ship. He has about 50 recipes from ships, squadrons and bases to choose from. This recipe, which he is serving in April, utilizes milk and blueberry jam, neither of which are standard curry ingredients.

"These recipes were made using what that cook had in his pantry at the time," Poston says. "You're underway at sea and you can't get more stuff so you use what you have. The jam gives it a little sweetness and it changes the color a little bit. The milk gives it a little smoother of a mouth feel." — Vanessa Salvía

Makes 4 quarts

1/4 cup soy or vegetable oil
1 tbsp. minced garlic
1 tbsp. minced or grated ginger
3/4 pound yellow onion, small dice
1/2 pound carrot, small dice
4 cups each vegetable stock and water
1 8.4 oz. box of curry roux (a flavoring "bar" found in Asian markets)
2 tbsp. ketchup

2 oz. each Worcestershire and tonkatsu sauce (Izakaya Meiji makes its own tonkatsu but you can purchase jarred versions)
1/4 cup sake
1 pound eggplant in 1-inch dice (Japanese eggplant preferred, or slender Chinese eggplant)
3/4 pound shelled English peas
2 tbsp. blueberry jam
1 cup milk
1 oz. garam masala or curry powder

In stockpot over medium heat add 1 tablespoon oil, garlic, ginger and onion and sauté until soft. Add carrots and peas and sauté until soft. Meanwhile, place water in separate pot and add the curry roux. Heat gently until the curry roux melts and thickens in the water. Add the curry roux water and stock, ketchup, Worcestershire, tonkatsu and sake to the first pot and simmer 30 minutes.

Meanwhile, dice eggplant and fry in remaining oil in separate pot until brown and soft. Remove to a paper towel to drain. Add eggplant to first pot.

In small bowl combine milk and jam. Whisk in the garam masala or curry powder. Add to main pot and continue cooking for five minutes. Taste and adjust for seasonings, including salt and pepper. Serve with rice.

• A new gluten-free cafe is in the works, with Alex Moon heading up the effort. Sundial Cafe & Bakery will feature an all gluten-free and vegetarian menu, with additional options for vegans. Future dishes include banana-blueberry waffles, vegan sweet potato enchiladas and chocolate-banana-walnut pancakes. Moon is funding the project with an online Kickstarter campaign that ends April 3. As of press time, she has raised $10,500 of her $12,000 goal. If the necessary funding comes through, she plans to open the cafe sometime between August and October of this year.

Bun Vermicelli (Cold Rice Noodle Bowl) FROM BON MI

Don’t give up if you’re hungry for lunch and see a line out the door at Bon Mi in downtown Eugene. The Vietnamese eatery regularly sells about 150 bánh mì sandwiches daily, but it takes almost no time at all to prepare them.

“Even if there’s a line, people are in and out in five minutes,” says manager Ashley Gietz, the stepdaughter of owner Yoon Bigot. “People never have to wait.”

Bigot herself is Korean, but she lived in a Vietnamese neighborhood in Los Angeles for eight years. While there, she worked at a Korean barbecue place, but she says she never missed a day having the classic Vietnamese soup pho. “Soup is very soothing day or night, it doesn’t matter the weather,” Bigot says. “When it’s hot you feel like noodles because it’s light, but when it’s winter, when it’s cold, you want something hot for breakfast. In Asian cultures our meals are rice and soup three times a day.”

When she moved to Eugene and began working at Noodle Bowl about five years ago, Bigot says she was disheartened at how few Vietnamese eateries there were, so she opened her own three years ago. “I tried to take what I had tasted but I made it a better way,” she says. “The sandwiches I taste at other places, they’re very bland. Ours is a powerful, strong taste.”

Bigot is drawn to Vietnamese food because of its freshness, simplicity and ease of preparation, unlike Korean food, which is notable for the numerous side dishes that are served at every meal. “Vietnamese food is not like that,” Bigot says. “It’s fast, it’s easy, it’s very fresh and it’s one bowl.”

And, because the noodles are made from rice, these bowls are always gluten free.

At Bon Mi, the sandwiches and noodle bowls are served with a choice of marinated tofu, chicken, pork or beef and three house-made sauces — a vegan lime sauce, garlic-chili sauce and a house-made fish sauce. — Vanessa Salvia

For the sauce:
1/2 tsp. garlic chili sauce
2 tbsp. fish sauce (Bon Mi uses a house-made version with coconut and lime)

Mix together and set aside.

Layer in the bottom of a bowl, starting with the lettuce:
1 cup chopped iceberg lettuce
1/2 cup pickled vegetables such as radishes and carrots (Bon Mi makes their own)
1/4 cup shredded cucumber
5 oz. cooked rice noodles
3/4 cup your choice of protein
Cilantro leaves and chopped green onion for garnish

Pour the sauce over the ingredients in the bowl and serve.

Celery and Gluten Salad FROM 221 BCE

Xi'an, the capitol city of China's Shaanxi province, is better known for its terracotta warriors than its food. But it was a major stop on the Silk Road, and a significant Muslim influence can be found in its cuisine. 221 BCE, which opened in November near campus, is serving the food from this region.

The Muslim influence is strong in one of Xi'an's most famous dishes being served at 221 BCE, beef and lamb pao mo soup ($14) with torn bits of handmade flatbread boiled in lamb and beef bone broth, plus slices of lamb and chili sauce. "Our menu is daily food in Xi'an," says 221 BCE chef Owen Griffin.

Named after the first year of China's foundational Qin dynasty, 221 BCE is owned by Chun Yang, a Chinese man who goes by Bill. His sister owns two Chinese restaurants, one a Shaanxi-style establishment in Seattle. Yang wanted to open one too, and when he asked around about where to locate, he had many former UO students in the Seattle area tell him that Eugene's campus would be a prime location.

Most of the Chinese restaurants in Eugene specialize in Cantonese or Szechuan, and Griffin admits that a Shaanxi menu will be unfamiliar to most Americans. "It's very different," Griffin says. "It's not your typical Chinese food. We don't have any rice. The majority of our clientele are international Chinese students, although Americans are wandering in."

The prices at 221 BCE are a little bit higher than what you might expect for similar dishes at other restaurants, but Griffin says that's because Yang must source specialty ingredients from larger Chinese markets around the West Coast. Griffin is proud of the restaurant's commitment to authenticity. He says though the dishes appear simple, many steps go into the preparation, which must be done in a precise manner to achieve the right flavor.

"There's only five ingredients in this celery salad, and they have to be in the right proportions or it doesn't taste like it is supposed to. It has to be just right or the diners will know it's not prepared like it's supposed to be," Griffin says.

He says he's had customers politely but firmly return a dish to the kitchen if it is lacking in some required flavor. Two of Yang's Chinese cousins also work in the kitchen, and they tell Griffin when his preparations are not exactly dialed in.

That doesn't seem to happen often, though. "We have some people coming in daily to eat," Griffin says. "We have some people come in three times a day. Because we have so many international students coming in and they're telling us they like the food and then coming back, I know we're doing it right."

Vital wheat gluten is made from the protein found in the endosperm of the wheat berry and contains 75 to 80 percent protein. When combined with water it becomes highly elastic and very chewy. This preparation is an unseasoned form of seitan. — Vanessa Salvía

For the gluten:
2 cups vital wheat gluten flour
2 cups water
1/4 to 1/2 tsp. yeast

Mix by hand until a dough forms. Allow to proof for three hours. Tear the dough into pieces and place on top of cheesecloth or thin canvas. Place in a steamer basket and allow the gluten to steam for one hour. Allow to cool. Makes about 1 pound of gluten.

For the salad:
1/4 cup very thin celery, sliced on the bias
1/4 tsp. salt
1/4 tsp. chicken bouillon powder
2 oz. hot chili oil
3/4 cup prepared gluten in small bite-size pieces

Combine all salad ingredients in a bowl and mix well to combine. Serve cold.
